SEEKING GHOST HE TOOK A LIFE.

Hezekiah Coates Explains the Corbin Shooting.

HAD THE GUN READY FOR ACTION.

Tae Boy's Intended Victim a Negro Terrorizer of the Neighborhood-Playful Threat on Meeting the Girl Precedes the Tragedy.

A leaded, old-fashloned, double-harreled shotgun of the blunderouss type, with which Hezekiah Center, a pickaning of fourteen years, sattled forth from his home to run down a "ghost," in the form of a negro who had terrorized his mother and other colored women in the neighborhood when they went abroad after dusk, was used in the murder of Carrie Corbin. the fourteen-year-old girl who was fatally shot Thursday night at Garfield, a small settlement near Anacostia.

Ready for the Chost.

Young Coates had cocked the shotgun before leaving his home, and on meeting the Corbin girl and her ten-year-old brother he in a spirit of fun told them to throw up their hands. Porretting that he had cocked the loaded weapon, he pulled the trigger, and the Corbin girl became the target for its contents. The shot entered her left breast and passed through her body.

Ran Home After Being Shot.

Following the gun's report the injured girl ran to the home of her aunt, Agner Butts, while young Coates ran to the home of a neighbor, Mrs. Kate Washington, where his mother was visiting. There he deposited the fowling place and left the house, but returned later and took the house, but returned later and took the gun to his own home, located about 200 yards from the place where he met the Corbin girl and her brother.

The girl, on reaching the board walk leading to the front door of her aunt's house, fell bleeding and dying. The spark of life had fled when assistance reached her. The fact that the girl ran when Contes fired the gun caused him to have not the least apprehension that she had been wounded.

Returning From Rehearsal.

The girl and her brother were return ing from a rehearsal for a Christmus en tertainment, in which she was to take part. In her hand she held a piece of Major Clark retain his membership in the paper containing the following verse:

"I think this is a levely day,
I am glad that Christ was born:
I would like to be something for him
This blessed Christmas morn."

This was what she was to have recited at the entertainment. The piece of paper, riddled with shet and bloodstained, was found near the scene of the trapedy shortly after the accident.

Search for a Clue.

Search for a clue as to the person who had taken the young girl's life was resumed yesterday morning, the officers of the sub-police station at Anacostia being assisted by Detectives Miller, Peck and Lacy, of Police Headquarters, who were detailed on the case by Captain Boardman.

Ernest Jones, a colored boy, and Paul
Johnson, who had been gunning Thursday afternoon, were arrested on sus-picion. A portion of the proper used in the charge that struck the girl was found by Officer W. E. Stewart, of the sub-station, and this satisfied him that the weapon was a double-barreled shotgun, and not a breech-loader, the type of fowl-ing plece with which the Johnson boy was armed.

Contes Confesses the Beed.

Shortly before noon yesterday Thomas Jefferson, a colored veteran, who was also at Mrs. Kate Washington's house when the Coates boy came in and deposited the gun, reported the incident to the poresulted in his arrest by Officer McCor-mack, of the sub-station, who brought his youthful prisoner to the station on horseback. On reaching the station Coates made a clean breast of the whole affair to Detective Lacy in the presence of Sergeant Anderson and Policemen Mc-Cormack and Schuyler.

Sent to the House of Detention.

Contes was sent from Police Headquarters to the House of Detention, where he will be kept pending the Coroner's in-quest. The Coroner viewed the body Thursday night and ordered it removed to the morgue. An inquest will be held at 11 o'clock this morning.

VICTIM HAS A CHANCE FOR LIFE.

All Hope of Clearing Up the Mystery Centred on Her Recovery -Theories of Detectives Fail to Produce Results.

"No theory appeals to me in the mystery of the assault upon Mrs. Ada Gilbert Dennis. Nothing yet done brings us a plausible clue. I have examined the premises; have taken part in the investigation. A motive for the crime is not found. It must be discovered, if the case is to be cleared up. No human reasoning fits this mystery. A solution may only lie in the recovery of Mrs. Dennis. Notwinstandmig this general notification to the entire milliary service, and porticularly to the line officers, but one applicant presented himself for detail to the Ordnence Corps Upon examination he failed to pass. Since en two more vacancles have occurred se filled, with no applicants.

Reorganization Bill Responsible. This condition was brought about by the nasage of the last reorganization bill, which provided for a detail from the line to the Ordinance Corps. Before the pas-sage of this get officers entering the Ord-nance Corps did so permanently and were entitled to exira pay. At that time offi-cers of the line exerted themseives to se-cure borths in the staff departments, but since the adoption of the detail system they prefer to take their chances with their regiments to coming to Washington or entering the staff bureaus.
